

Who returned?

Performance in the Bunge and MP re-election

Introduction

The five year term of the 9th Parliament of Tanzania ended on July 16, 2010. To mark this event President Jakaya Kikwete delivered a two hour speech to Members of Parliament (MPs), entitled “We Promise, We Deliver”. In his speech, the President highlighted the achievements of his Government. On October 31, 2010, Tanzanian citizens elected representatives to the 10th Parliament. When casting their votes, citizens were expected to consider the achievements of the Government, as well as the past level of activity of the MPs who had represented them. Did they?

One measure voters may use when assessing an MP is how actively he or she participated in the business of Parliament. Does it matter to voters how many basic and supplementary questions an MP asked or how many contributions he or she made while in Parliament? This brief presents six facts about the level of activity of MPs in the 9th Parliament and their success in returning for the 10th Parliament. The data presented in this brief were obtained from the Bunge website (www.bunge.go.tz) and can also be downloaded from www.uwazi.org.

The brief shows that less than half of the elected MPs returned to Parliament in 2010 and that only one-third of the elected ordinary MPs (i.e., MPs who were not high level government officials) retained their seat in the Bunge. The brief shows that elected ordinary MPs who returned were more active than those who did not return. It also shows that the political parties with more active MPs in Parliament gained seats in the elections of October 2010, while the party with less active MPs lost seats. In combination, these facts suggest that the performance of MPs in the Bunge does matter to voters.

This brief was produced under the general guidance of Johannes Hoogeveen of Uwazi at Twaweza, housed by Hivos Tanzania.

Six facts about (non-)returning MPs

Fact 1: Less than half of the elected MPs returned to Parliament after 2010

The 9th Parliament had 231 elected MPs. Of these, 100 returned to the Bunge after the October 2010 elections, while 131 (57 percent) did not. Nine out of 18 elected female MPs (50 percent) did not return, while 122 out of 213 male MPs (57 percent) did not return, making male MPs slightly less likely to return than female MPs.

Fact 2: Cabinet members and other high ranking officials were much more likely to return

MPs who were Cabinet members or other high level government officials (e.g., deputy speaker, speaker, attorney general, and regional commissioners) had a much greater likelihood of returning to Parliament than ordinary MPs. As Figure 2 illustrates, 80 percent (35 out of 44) of elected MPs who were high ranking government officials were re-elected, while only 35 percent (65 out of 187) of ordinary MPs returned to the Bunge after the 2010 election.

Source of data: Bunge website.

Fact 3: CUF and CCM had the highest percentages of MPs who did not return

As shown in Figure 3, 66 percent of elected ordinary CCM MPs did not return to the Bunge after the election, while 67 percent of elected ordinary CUF MPs did not return. UDP, whose only member returned to Parliament, and CHADEMA (40 percent) had the lowest percentages of elected ordinary MPs who did not return to the Bunge after the 2010 election.

Fact 4: Ordinary MPs who did not return were less active

Of the 187 elected ordinary MPs in the 9th Parliament, 65 returned and 122 did not. The average number of interventions by MPs who returned was considerably higher than that of MPs who did not return. On average, returning MPs made 92 interventions during their five year term, while non-returning MPs made 81 interventions.

Fact 5: CUF is the only party that retained its more active MPs

Fact 4 demonstrates that MPs who returned to Parliament were more active. If one considers the level of activity for returning and non-returning MPs by political party, one notes that only CUF retained its more active MPs. The 6 CUF MPs who returned to the Bunge made 116 interventions on average, while the 12 CUF MPs who did not return made 72 interventions on average. For CCM and CHADEMA, on the other hand, there is no discernable difference in the number of interventions made between MPs who returned and those who did not. The 55 returning CCM MPs made 83 interventions on average, while the 108 CCM MPs who did not return averaged 80 interventions. The 3 returning CHADEMA MPs made 174 interventions on average, while the 2 who did not return made 173 interventions.

Fact 6: The party with less active MPs lost seats in the 2010 general election

The party with the most active MPs in the 9th Parliament were rewarded with additional seats after the 2010 general election. The party with least active MPs, on the other hand, lost seats. This can be inferred from Table 1. The table shows that CHADEMA’s ordinary MPs were most active in Parliament (173 interventions on average). CUF and CCM’s MPs were significantly less active, with an average of 87 and 80 interventions per ordinary MP, respectively.

To assess whether the number of interventions was related to electoral outcomes, columns 3 and 4 in Table 1 show the percent of elected MPs each party has after the elections. (Table 1 presents percentage, not the number, of elected MPs because the number of constituencies in the 2010 election increased from 231 in 2005 to 239 in 2010.) Considering the table, one notes that the party with the largest number of interventions (CHADEMA) increased its percentage of MPs in the Bunge more than four-fold, from 2 percent to 9 percent. The least active party (CCM), on the other hand, reduced its share of MPs in the Bunge by 11 percent (from 89 percent to 78 percent). CUF, the party whose members were slightly more active than those of CCM, increased its presence marginally (from 8 percent to 10 percent). The suggestion emerging from these findings is consistent with the observation that voters do take into consideration the level of activity in Parliament when deciding for which party to vote.

Table 1: Number of interventions per MP and percent of party representation in the Bunge

	Interventions per MP	Percent of MPs in Bunge in 9 th Parliament	Percent of MPs in Bunge in 10 th Parliament	Percent change in MPs between 2005 and 2010
CHADEMA	173	2 percent	9 percent	+7 percent
CUF	87	8 percent	10 percent	+2 percent
CCM	80	89 percent	78 percent	-11 percent
Other parties (incl. UDP)	NA	1 percent	3 percent	+2 percent
Average / total	85	100 percent	100 percent	--

Conclusion

More than half of the elected MPs in the 9th session of Parliament did not return after the election in October 2010. MPs who were not Cabinet members or high level officials had a particularly high likelihood of not returning: only 35 percent of ordinary MPs came back to the Bunge after the elections.

In this brief, we demonstrate that during the 2010 General Election, voters seem to have taken into account the level of activity of MPs during the 9th session of the Bunge. The party with the least active MPs lost significantly (CCM), while the party with most active MPs (CHADEMA) gained.

One implication of these findings for the 10th Parliament is that parties with ambitions to grow in the future would do well to encourage their MPs to actively participate in the business of the Bunge.
